Back to the Wild

April 2009

Common Murre (Uria aalge)

An abundant, penguin-like bird of the cooler northern oceans, the Common Murre nests along rocky cliffs and spends its winter at sea.

I first saw these two as badly, oiled, dehydrated, and in need of help. After a stabilization period, they were washed (not an easy process), fed and rehydrated. And here they are in our outside pool ready to go home. Photo taken on 4/22/09. They were released shortly after.

Western Grebe
(Aechmophorus occidentalis)

These two found their way to Pacific Wildlife Care, in need of help. Well they came to the right place. Through the loving care of many people, we sent them back to their home.

Released in Morro Bay 4/22/09
